Tip or Complaint:

Now that the summer temperatures have risen to 115 degrees plus, there is more smell and particulates in the air. The higher the temperature, the higher the number of exhaust fans in service in these chicken barns. These fans force the exhaust air from the barns through the manure rooms which have large piles of chicken feces and dead chickens, etc.. The drying fines, particulates, break loose from these piles and disperse into the surrounding community and beyond. Last night the smell was extreme and the particulates could be seen drifting heavily through the beam of my flashlight. This happens whenever the air current is blowing in my direction day in and day out. If the breeze is not in my direction I know that other neighbors are getting the smell and particulates from this nasty chicken hell hole. It is well known that these particulates can carry pathogens, disease, etc.. and put the community's health at a high risk. I myself have been feeling the impact of health issues and it is up to the EPA to save us, please.
